Introduction

Often referred to as a watershed moment in Jamaica's history; the Morant Bay rebellion of 1865, left an indelible mark on Jamaica's political and social history. Over the years researchers have tried to analyze and rationalize the event and its aftermath to varying degrees.

In this the 150th anniversary of the Morant Bay Rebellion, the National Library of Jamaica (NLJ) put together a bibliography of materials with these varying perspectives.

Purpose

The main purpose of this bibliography is to identify and highlight in a single publication, resources held at the National Library of Jamaica on the Morant Bay Rebellion. Though the NLJ holds no monopoly on resources related to the rebellion, its holding represent a significant percentage of primary content on the rebellion. The volume of newspaper articles and official/government documents are invaluable resources to any research on this event. The NLJ envisages that this bibliography will be of great assistance in guiding researchers.

Scope

An attempt was made to collect all resources specific to the rebellion, held at the National Library of Jamaica; books, pamphlets, journal articles, newspaper articles, manuscripts, photographs, audio/visual resources, maps and government/official documents. However, there are a few limitations. The bibliography represents a complete list of books published specifically on the rebellion. In general, materials were excluded if the rebellion was not the primary focus. Therefore, books making brief references or having one or two chapters were excluded; except Gardner's History of Jamaica, published in 1873. Many of the books published relating to the rebellion was however, published in the 19th century, therefore not many contemporary books are listed. Manuscripts were also selected based on specific focus on the rebellion and not based on brief references.

The scope of newspapers was limited to those published in 1865/1866. From these years three titles were selected for detailed listing of related articles; the Falmouth Post, Jamaica Tribune and the Gleaner. Therefore, not all newspapers of 1865 are listed under the heading newspapers.

Very few photographs/images of the rebellion were found. Photographs were mainly portraits of some of the key persons in the rebellion, as guided by our collection process.

Collection Process

The search for resources began with the National Library's card and online catalogues. Keywords such as "rebellion" "Morant Bay" "uprising" and "riot" were used and combined in various ways to elicit results. Searches for known authors and titles were also done. Searches were also done on key persons in the rebellion, such as "Gordon," "Eyre" and "Bogle." Shelf-checking of the general section under which materials on the Morant Rebellion are classified, was also done i.e. 972.9204. The checking of the shelves and pamphlet boxes was significant in finding items that may have been inadvertently left off the list.

The majority of items identified for the Morant Bay Rebellion bibliography, especially newspaper and official/government documents" were taken from an internal document titled "Jamaica Unshackled 1831-1938." This is a list of sources identified over ten years ago for digitisation and eventual access through the library's first digital collection, Jamaica Unshackled.

Another major step in the collection process was checking indexes and significant publications on the topic for references. Heuman's, The Killing Time was the main secondary source used to identify materials that may not have been discovered yet. Manuscript Sources of the West Indies by Kenneth Ingram was checked for sources at the National Library of Jamaica which may have been missed in a catalogue search.

The indexes of the following major publications were also checked:

Jamaica Journal

Caribbean Quarterly

Jamaican Historical Review

Annotation

There are few annotations. Where provided, it is italicised and represents an attempt to indicate content or provide additional bibliographic information where the title is insufficient.

Arrangement

Entries are arranged alphabetically by author, or title where no author is named, and are placed in categories according to the format. A call number is included for easy retrieval at the library. Entries highlighted in blue are available online.
